President's Message

June 2013

If you have been reading my messages in this space for the past several quarterlies, you will have observed that I am very excited about the evolution of our website (www.ccgsga.org).

The maintenance of this asset proved to be beyond what could be expected of amateur volunteers. We asked the membership to be looking for someone with the necessary experience who might be willing to handle the details of constant observation and adjustments.

Bobby Holcombe took on this challenge and did some research in the community and located a perfect match for the Society. (Thank you, Bobby.)

The firm of Roenigk Digital Craft (www.roenigk.com) has offered to work with our interim web manager (Carolyn Scherm) to maintain and even improve the site. Having these very professional folks advising, assisting and maintaining is a huge blessing! And it's "pro bono" (which is the same as free).

Check out their website and, if you have the chance, recommend them to others.

Since the month of April is Confederate Heritage month in Georgia, we invited Confederate historian and author, Robert L Carter, to be our speaker at the April society meeting. His subject was about the "Battle of Chickamauga." (Right here in Georgia.) This was the third most bloody battle of the entire conflict.

As a result of the super interest that was generated from Robert's program, he has offered to conduct a personal guided tour of Chickamauga on a Thursday this summer (date to be decided later). We have also invited the local Sons of Confederate Veterans to join with us for this unusual opportunity.

Keep watch at the website for the announcement of the date and time of departure for this great opportunity.

If you could find just two (2) hours during the month to spend greeting patrons in Special Collections, please contact Pat Williams (770-854-7080). You don't need to be professional, just friendly – you will meet the world's nicest people (other genealogist).

Remembering Veterans – Past and Present

by Betty Jo Parsons

Several things recently have made me think a bit more seriously about the meaning of Memorial Day.

Around Confederate Memorial Day I had a phone call from one of our members who asked if there was some way we could make an alphabetized list of all Confederate veterans buried in the large Carrollton City Cemetery and the location of their graves. While they had a list of names, the list did not indicate a location. It's an arduous task to locate more than 130 tombstones in a large cemetery without some kind of map! I recalled that each year members of the McDaniel-Curtis Camp, SCV, spent their Saturdays or evenings before Confederate Memorial Day placing small flags on these graves. They do this year after year, remembering those who answered the call.

The Veteran's Memorial Park in Tallapoosa, Haralson County, Georgia, was initially started by one of Haralson County's own veterans. This is a beautiful, well-maintained park near the old Tallapoosa High School. At this time of year, the flags are blowing gently in the wind and it is not uncommon to see people strolling through the walkways looking for names of their family or friends. More about this park can be found at www.haralsoncountyveteransassociation.org.

The Veterans Memorial Park in Carrollton is exemplary of the dedication of many volunteers and citizens of Carroll County who have chosen this venue to honor veterans of all wars from the county. Their mission statement reads:

The Carroll County Veterans Memorial Park Committee's mission is to plan, build, equip and maintain a park to honor military veterans of the United States of America who are currently living in Carroll County, who have lived in Carroll County at some time or who have Carroll County connections and who honorably served their country. This includes any period of service in the Armed Forces in which the individual is currently serving or has been honorably separated from active or inactive service, beginning with the American Revolution.

The website for Carroll County Veterans Memorial Park is www.carrollcountyveteransmemorialpark.com. There you will find a list of all veterans honored in this park, as well as other information.

Memorial Day conjures up many personal memories for me. All six of my brothers served in various branches of the military through the years. The oldest two were in combat during World War II. While I was a little too young at first to realize the significance of events at the time, I can still recall the worried expressions on my parents' faces. All families dreaded to see the Western Union delivery person at their front door, standing there with the dreaded yellow envelope in his hand. And one day, there he was at our door—my oldest brother had been wounded, but there was no other information in the telegram. As it turned out, he was only wounded in the hand, but it seemed like a lifetime before we received that final good news.

It is very humbling to look at these beautiful memorial parks today and recall the veterans whom they honor. It is even more extraordinary to think that the seed was planted by either a single veteran, a veteran's family or friend, and eventually materialized into a sacred thing of beauty. If there is a Veterans Memorial Park near you, visit it this Memorial Day. The picnic can wait. †

Book Review: Into the Gray Vale

Ted O. Brooke—one of our longtime members and contributor of material to this quarterly—has recently published a new book.

Into the Gray Vale: Registers of the Georgia Confederate Soldiers' Home, Atlanta, Georgia, 1901-1941, is the complete abstracted information from the three registers of all 1,164 applicants to the Confederate Soldiers' Home in Atlanta. The information includes names, counties of residence, date and place of birth, date and military unit entered, age upon admission to the home, date of death or discharge from the home, date and place of burial, and more. Three indexes are included in this book: Names, Places, and Military Units.

The title alone is enough to pique one's interest. Ben Morris writes in the Foreword:

Most people are familiar with Webster's first definition of the word Vale—a low-lying valley. Less known is the Latin derivative meaning a farewell among comrades, and an admonition to be well and strong. Into the Gray Vale . . . draws deeply on the Latin definition. This book contains the condensed life stories of noble men who fought against overwhelming forces to defend their families and homes. It tells the final chapter of these old men who were once young soldiers in gray.

Most all entries have a person's name and relation to the veteran to contact in case of death, thus providing one or more family names. This book will make an excellent addition to your personal library, and a "must have" for the research room in your local library.

Copies may be ordered – $35 postpaid – from Ted O. Brooke, 2055 Foster Drive, Cumming, GA 30040.

New Buildings

We had something to say not long ago of the new buildings in the South Eastern portions of town, we failed however in the neighborhood of Mr. Joe Benson. Going out there a few days since, on a little business, we found that this part of town was not behind any other in the spirit of improvement. Mrs. Bogges, Mr. Jesse Blalock and Mr. J. B. Stewart have put up neat cottages out there coming with Mr. Benson quite a pleasant little neighborhood. Mr. Ledbetter is also building just beyond there, also Mr. Urquhart and others are putting up very nice residences. In the Northern and Western portions of town, as everywhere else, improvement is the order of the day. On seminary street, we note the new residences of J. T. Robinson the Mes__ Gaston's, Mr. Jas. Coleman, Mr. J. J. __sion and Mr. E. W. Harper. On Cedartown street we find the new residences of Mr. Meigs, Mr. Cobb, Mr. Stradley, Mr. Bays, Mr. Barnes, and Mr. Moore. All of the above, we believe have been put up within the last year. On the last named street.

Death on the Rail. Man run over by the construction train at Whitesburg and killed immediately. A Swede by the name of Daniel Moline was run over by the Construction Train at Whitesburg on last Monday evening, and immediately killed. He was attempting to get upon the flat as they are called, while in motion, being between two of them and losing his hold, was run over by one of the Flats, and the engine which was behind killing him immediately.

Mr. Moline was up at Whitesburg for a short visit, being a citizen of Palmetto, and we understand was an industrious and energetic man, being a splendid machinist.

He leaves behind a wife and child, who were at Whitesburg at the time of the sad calamity.

The oldest man in America. Seeing an extract from the Newport News in your paper concerning the death of "Aunt Hannah," colored, who was one hundred and twenty two years old, has induced me to write you the following:

It is not known perhaps to many of our readers that Sheriff Williamson and Captain L. J. Smith left several days ago for North Alabama for the purpose of arresting Press Hesterly who killed Kinch Boon in --- County just after the war. They learned on last Tuesday and reported they found Hesterly in Lauderdale county, Alabama and that upon an attempt to arrest by the Sheriff of the county and the marshal of Florence, he resisted and was shot by both of them and killed as they thought. This occurred at Hesterly's house. Messrs. Williamson and Smith were not present but were waiting some two miles from there for the return of these officers soon after the shooting of Hesterly the Sheriff and Marshal went back to where Messrs. Williamson and Smith were and reported what had occurred. In about three hours all went back to Hesterly's house, when they found that he had been taken off by friends. It is not known whether the wounds which Hesterly received were mortal or not. The reason given by the Sheriff for moving him after the shooting was on account of the wailings of the wife and children which they could not stand. Messrs. Williamson and Smith failed to find out the whereabouts of Hesterly before leaving.

Educational History in the Twentieth Century

[Editor's Introduction: In cleaning out the map drawers in Special Collections at Neva Lomason Library, Carrollton, our Library Coordinator found some real treasures. Among those treasures was a folder labeled "Unused material for original typescript for Georgia's Last Frontier by J. C. Bonner."

One of the chapters marked "Out" was titled "Educational History in the Twentieth Century." While some of the information in this chapter did make it into the book, we thought you may enjoy reading what didn't make the cut. This is the first part of four segments of the chapter on educational development in the county.

The society has Mr. Bonner's book for sale ($14) and can be ordered directly from the society (order blank at the back of this quarterly) or may be purchased from Friends of the Library of Neva Lomason if you live in the area.]

New educational developments which occurred in the first third of the twentieth century included agricultural and homemaking education, longer school terms, and school consolidation in the interest of quality and efficiency. Most of these were logical results of that phase of the Populist movement which stimulated a reassessment of the educational opportunities of rural youth. One of the earliest attempts at school consolidation combined with pupil transportation was made at Temple in 1903. At that time a group of enterprising citizens reorganized the local school with the purpose of broadening its clientele and providing rural children with vocational training. "We believe that education should touch the life work of the people . . . with those things which touch his life as a farmer," read the 1904 prospectus of "The Temple Model School."

At this time E. L. Connell was president of the board of directors. Ira W. Williams, who held a bachelor of arts degree from the University of Georgia, was superintendent. His assistant was J. Phil Campbell, later to become a prominent figure in the agricultural program of the New Deal. Included among the teachers were Mrs. Laura Josephine Rozar, a graduate of Wesleyan College, who taught Latin, and Madam Dell Antonio, a music teacher from Vienna, Austria. The school had only ten grades, but the curriculum included Latin, Greek, geology, botany, physics, and trigonometry. A college preparatory student could complete the fourth year of Latin and two of Greek by the end of the tenth grade. The terminal student after the seventh grade entered courses such as agriculture, farm engineering, drawing, and manual training. The girls studied sewing, painting, and "domestic science." The first three elementary grades included such activities as nature study, clay modeling and paper cutting, as well as reading, writing, arithmetic and geography. American and Georgia history and government were completed in the upper elementary grades.

A number of rural children were transported to the school in mule-drawn covered wagons. Others might obtain board with local families at eight to ten dollars per month. Non-resident pupils were charged $1.25 to $3.00 per month tuition, the figure rising to the maximum in the ninth and tenth grades. In 1903 there was a total of 320 pupils in the school, twenty-seven of whom paid extra tuition for music lessons. Among the school's pupils in 1904 the following later became prominent in business and professional life: Guy H. Wells, Knox Walker, Emmett Beall, Claude Griffin, Phil Astin, Paul Cobb, and Mayberry Rozar.

The Temple Model School endured only for a brief period, however. While soliciting and receiving sizeable gifts from people in Atlanta and elsewhere, the school made financial commitments which it was unable to meet. The community not only lacked the resources to maintain such a school, but its conservative outlook often clashed with the progressive ideas of Ira Williams and his staff. At the end of the 1907 term the school resumed a more orthodox pattern but it remained one of the better village schools of the county.

Agricultural education begun at Temple received statewide endorsement in 1906 with the passage of a law for the establishment of eleven congressional district agricultural and mechanical schools throughout the state (increased to twelve in 1919). It is significant to note that Ira Williams' counsel was solicited in the organization of these schools and he taught in one of the institutions for a brief period before becoming state entomologist.

The Fourth Congressional District at this time was comprised of ten counties in western Georgia, including Carroll on the extreme north and Marion County on the south. In competition with such cities as Newnan, LaGrange and Columbus, Carrollton was designated as the location of the district school. Several local sites were considered, including the Grow-Kingsbury livestock farm on the Little Tallapoosa River, and the site near the railroad where the Maple Street Grammar School later was constructed, in 1912. The board of trustees, of which George P. Munro of Buena Vista was chairman, selected the old Bonner plantation on the Bowdon road, then in possession of Bluford A. Sharp, who transferred two hundred and seventy-five acres of land to the trustees for $9,625. The old plantation house which was included in the purchase became the first woman's dormitory.

Two brick buildings were constructed during 1907 at a total cost of slightly less than $25,000. These were an academic building and a dormitory for men which was later known as Melson Hall. Clifton Mandeville and Joseph A. Aycock, local businessmen, were the contractors. The first term of the school opened in January 1908, with a faculty of five people, including Principal John Holland Melson and his wife. Mrs. L. J. Rozar, formerly of the Temple School, later was engaged to teach English. She became one of the most popular and beloved teachers ever to be associated with the school. Fifty-two boarding pupils and fifty-eight day pupils enrolled for the opening session. Seven counties were represented in the student body, of whom more than seventy percent were from Carroll County.

Among the students were Lee B. Wyatt, a future presiding justice of the Georgia Supreme Court, Charles Fitts, a future Carrollton physician, Eugene Spratlin who was to become a lawyer, and Ernie Adamson who became assistant manager of the Birmingham branch of the Ford Motor Company. Instead of attracting youth back to the farm where they would enhance the agricultural life of the region, the school from the beginning provided an incentive for them to enter urban trades and professions, which many did with surprising success.

When the first contingent of students arrived, doors to the dormitory rooms had not yet been installed. Except for one frozen hydrant on the front campus, there was no source of running water. Buildings were without central heat and electric lights. There was neither a library nor classroom equipment. A "book shower" arranged by Mrs. J. H. Melson on January 27, provided the nucleus of a library when 325 volumes of nondescript books and bound volumes of magazines were contributed by local people.

These books were shelved in one of the linen closets in the boys' dormitory, and thirty books were checked out on the first day. In February, Principal J. H. Melson announced that the school needed "four milk cows, five shotes [sic], six sheep and 100 chickens . . . and will appreciate very much donations by our farmer friends." Desks for classrooms did not arrive until the middle of February. In the meantime, tables, arm chairs and lamps were placed in the main hall of the dormitory where a two-hour study period was observed in the evenings. By April seats were installed in the auditorium when the First Baptist Church donated the old pews from the frame building being replaced on Newnan Street. The school held frequent box suppers to raise funds for equipment. Such a supper given in March netted thirty-six dollars. Green Burson auctioned the boxes off at prices ranging from fifty cents to $1.25 each. Towns people were the principal bidders.

The school's operation under primitive conditions during the winter of 1908 resulted in an outbreak of sickness, demoralizing students as well as the administration. In March twenty-one students were down with measles and there were several cases of pneumonia. A number of Carrollton's young matrons, including Mrs. Clifton Mandeville, came to the school to help care for the sick, assisted by a special nurse from Atlanta whom they had employed. One student, Murray Garrett of Marion County, died in the dormitory on March 20. Among those who went home to recuperate were Lee Wyatt, Daisy Echols, Vesta Chambers, Wesley Veal, John Turner, and Lucile Meriwether.

It is a tribute to its leaders that the institution survived and experienced a steady growth under such adverse circumstances. Much of its success was a result of the loyal support, financial and moral, of the people of the county and of Carrollton in particular. The 1906 law establishing the eleven agricultural schools provided no direct appropriation of funds for their support but specified that the institutions should receive the inspection fees on oil, food and fertilizers collected by the Department of Agriculture. The Carrollton school's financial report for the first term's operation on June 16, 1908, showed that it had received $6,500 from this source, while the people of the county had donated the land and buildings. These donations were made by the city and county governments, and by individuals. The city furnished electric lights and water after the first year. The county appropriated $15,000 for buildings, borrowing this amount from the two local banks to be repaid from county funds. An attempt by Wesley Domineck and others of the Temple community, seeking to restrain county officials from the payment of this loan, was unsuccessful. The presentments of the Carroll grand jury of April 1908 deplored the conditions "which invited an interruption of the tranquility of the sentiment of our people" on the school, which it regarded as "one of the most valuable assets to our moral, civic, and material good." It urged the people to "join hands in moral and financial support of this institution so heavily fraught with the possibility of good to our own and to generations yet unknown."

The depression of 1907 had made it impossible for some subscribers to make their payments on time. A few defaulted because they had expected the school to be located at Clem, Temple, Mt. Zion, or Oaklawn, or at some point near their homes. After 1908, however, with the return of prosperity, nearly all of the subscriptions were paid. The local paper cooperated by publishing a continuing list of paid-up subscribers. This list was a cross-section of the county's citizens and included such men as J. J. Lovvorn who paid fifty-five dollars; L. Newell, ten; H. C. Conner, five; W. H. Thomas, three; W. T. Hackney, $250; and A. J. Garst, one dollar.

Physical conditions at the school had improved by the opening of the fall term on September 2, but the enrollment of local day students had declined. There were seventeen girls and seventy-five boys, of whom seven of the former and fifty-five of the latter were boarders. Girls were now required to wear uniforms of blue shirt-waist suits with red ties and belts. The colors, blue and red, became the official colors of the school on February 20, 1908. Two new faculty members had been added. A third brick building, a dining hall with the ground floor to serve as a shop and a central heating plant, was under construction. It was completed in December at a cost of $5,000.

In somewhat of an over-statement, a school advertisement in 1908 proclaimed: "Everything free except what you eat." Work was required of all pupils to fulfill technical requirements of tuition; and books might be purchased from compensation paid for overtime. Teachers often complained of pupils who neglected academic duties in order to perform work for which they would be paid. Extra work was assigned for any breach of discipline. Such work for boys usually consisted of digging stumps from newly-cleared land near the campus.

Board during the first year cost each pupil $6.41 per month. Despite this low cost the school's average menu suggests a substantial diet. For breakfast there were grapenuts with sugar and cream, pork sausage, corn muffins, biscuit, and coffee—a typical farmer's breakfast. At noon there was soup with "crackling bread," boiled cabbage, mashed potatoes, steak, biscuit, and pudding. The evening meal consisted of potatoes, biscuit, cheese, syrup, and coffee. Sometimes these items were supplemented with fruits and other edibles from home. "R. B. Goodloe's home folks gave him a pleasant surprise one day this week, by sending him a lot of sugar cane which he and his friends enjoyed very much," wrote one student.

From Carroll County Times, Tuesday Morning June 29, 18____ Kansas Items

Kansas, Ga., June 25. Kansas is situated in the northwest part of Carroll county, six miles from Bowdon, ten miles from Tallapoosa and eight miles from Waco. It has an elevated situation and enjoys a pleasant temperature. It has one store, a postoffice and a blacksmith shop, which supply all commercial demands. It has one Primitive and one Missionary Baptist church. The Missionary Baptist was organized by a prebatory, Rev. J. W. McCleod, of Carrollton, moderator, H. N. Roberts, clerk. At the request of the body, Rev. W. J. Lovvorn preached the constitution sermon to a large assembly last Thursday.

Again we are glad to note our Kansas school is in the lead. It has advanced farther in the last two years than ever before in its history. Prof. Daniel had his highest class examined last year and all failed but one. This year, he had two classes examined and none failed. The following pupils were examined and received the following grades of license at the last examination: Emery Smith, third grade; Homer Burnham, third grade, Misses Laura McKibbens, second grade; Martha Horsley; Cintilla Smith, third grade. Of the second class: Miss Margaret Horsley, second grade; Tilman Glenn, third grade. The pupils are well pleased with their grades and we are all well pleased with their advancement they have made. We ask them all to press forward and they will soon reach the top, under Professor Daniel's instructions.

A good many people attended Poplar Springs meeting last Sunday.

Mrs. Nollie Crews, of Bremen, is the guest of Trion Patterson this week.

The yield of wheat in this community is very good. Mr. B. A. Styles had 160 bushels threshed on his place. Corn crops are very promising since the rain. Oats is off some on account of the dry weather.

Mr. John B. McWire has the best garden we have noticed in this vicinity. ✱
